About the tunes

File types

All .wav files are high-quality 44.1K sample rate, 24-bit WAV files.

All .mp3 files are lesser quality 192kpbs MP3 files.

File naming

Main - I almost always include a file titled "Main" (or the name of the song). This is the primary composition. Generally, these are the full song that I have composed for you to drop into your project. I sometimes include "main loops" as well, which are just sections of the main composition that you can loop seamlessly if you need to.

Loop - Any file that contains "loop" in it's filename has been designed to be repeatable. If you drop these files into your projects, you should be able to loop them as many times as you like seamlessly (without any noticable clips, etc.)

Stinger - I use the term "stinger" for clips that are short and attention grabbing. These are great for dropping in between two segments of your project.

Production notes

On mixing & mastering

All files already contain compression, limiting, EQ, etc.

I work hard to go through the process of mixing and mastering all of these tracks so that they are crisp, loud, and ready to go. With that said, I would recommend that (if you use any mastering effects of your own) you bypass using any other effects on these music files. They will likely distort if further processed.

If you do add mastering effects to your project AFTER including these music clips - I would recommend that you apply those effects via an effects bus that is bypassed by the track that these clips are on.

If you don't do any post-processing to your audio, or all of that is totally confusing, don't worry at all - just know that these clips are mastered. You don't need to add anything to em, just drop em in! :)
